Notes

Under Section 62(2) Capital Acquisitions Tax Consolidation Act, 2003 a person will not be registered as owner of property on foot of an application which is based on possession and made under the Land Registration Rules 1972, unless a certificate issued by the Revenue Commissioners is produced to the Register of Titles to the effect that the property in question did not become charged during the period commencing from the date as of which the person who is the current registered owner of the property was so registered, or 28 February, 1974, whichever is the latest, until the registration date of the present application, with gift or inheritance tax (including probate tax) or that any such charge shall, to the Commissioners' satisfaction, be discharged.

The Capital Acquisitions Tax Consolidation Act, 2003, as amended, sets out the legislation in relation to the taxation of gifts and inheritances. In general, a person is deemed to take a gift where under any disposition a person becomes beneficially entitled in possession (otherwise than on a death) to any benefit other than for full consideration. A person is deemed to take an inheritance where under or in consequence of any disposition the person becomes beneficially entitled in possession on a death to any benefit other than for full consideration. Probate tax is chargeable on the taxable value above a relevant threshold of estates passing by will or intestacy of persons dying between 17 June 1993 and 6 December 2000.
